

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

- 1 Brain Food
- 2 How to Easily Increase Your Water Intake
3 Ways to Help Your Legal Case Move Faster
- 3 Asparagus & Smoked Mozzarella Pizzettes
Don't Let This Distraction Destroy Your Productivity
- 4 'Jersey Shore' Stars Battle a New York Restaurant
Over Meatball Merch

The Meatball Shop Sued Snooki! (And Another 'Jersey Shore' Star, Too)

Reality TV stars Nicole "Snooki" Polizzi and Deena Cortese are gearing up for a court battle. But this isn't a showdown with another celebrity: It's a fight to the death over merchandise with ... a New York City-based meatball restaurant!

This case sounds laughable, but there's some real "meat" to dig into. The controversy started when the celebrity duo — known as "The Meatballs" since their time together on "Jersey Shore" — launched a clothing brand/online store called The Meatball Shop late last year.

The brand sells meatball-themed T-shirts, sweatshirts, and hats with slogans like "Team Meatball Forever" and "Meatball Squad." Over the holidays, they even offered a sweater with a checklist reading, "Pour wine, wrap gifts, decorate, be a meatball." All of this merchandise plays off the pair's "Jersey Shore" nickname, which Polizzi and Cortese earned because, as Food & Wine puts it, "The party girls are both very tan, curvy, and short."

Even with this claim to the moniker, the legality of the celebrities' clothing line has some competition from, well, places that sell actual meatballs. According to Page Six, the New York City-based restaurant The Meatball Shop sued Polizzi and Cortese in December of 2020, claiming their clothing infringes on its trademark. As of writing this, a judge is considering The Meatball Shop's request to shut Polizzi and Cortese's operation down.

To add even more meat to the argument, it was the owners of The Meatball Shop restaurant (Daniel Holzman and Michael Chernow) who first taught Polizzi and Cortese to make edible meatballs in 2017. The lesson was documented in a photo shoot with "In Touch." Does it get more ironic than that?

If you want to keep up with the drama, check PageSix.com, and if this article made you crave meatballs, don't worry — we've got you covered. Visit Epicurious.com and search "classic beef meatballs" for a recipe that will knock your socks off.

Brain Food

Reading Is Important, as One March Holiday Knows

On March 2, we celebrate Read Across America Day, a holiday that encourages Americans to sit down with a good book, and perhaps spark a love of reading in the next generation as well. I personally love to read. I enjoyed it as a child, got my bachelor's degree in English as a young adult, and remain a dedicated reader to this day.

I enjoy all kinds of books. I read a lot of what I call "dead writers," meaning traditional classic literature. Over the years, I have read significant novels from around the world. Reading novels that have been successful and highly praised from different cultures gives me a window into their daily life. For instance, what better understanding could I get of Chinese Communism in the '60s than reading "Waiting" by Ha Jin?

I am also a fan of what my kids and I call "mind candy." These are fun, fluffy little books that are meant to be enjoyed quickly and do not require much thought. One of my favorite times to enjoy mind candy is on an airplane. If I don't remember to bring some light reading with me, I always stop at the airport bookstore and pick something fun, like Liane Moriarty. I also follow a lot of authors my children have introduced me to over the years, like Brandon Sanderson or Suzanne Collins.

Of course, no series made better family reading than the "Harry Potter" novels. One of my favorite family memories is taking all my children, aged 2 and up, to the midnight premiere of the last "Harry Potter" book at Barnes & Noble. I knew it was a bit ridiculous to have the kids out at that hour for a book premiere, but I wanted them to experience how excited the world could be over a book. The store was packed solid. Many readers were in costume, and the event had a party atmosphere counting down the minutes to the official release date. After midnight, the line was huge. I realized that it would be 1 or 2 a.m. before we got a chance to purchase the book, and we had church the next morning at 8:30. I left without the book and planned to come back on Monday. As I drove home, I passed Walmart and made a quick stop, just in case. Minutes later, I was standing in front of a pallet of "Harry Potter" books with nobody around but the patiently waiting cashier. So, we got the fun of the party at Barnes and Noble without waiting in the actual line. I walked out with two copies — one for me and one for the kids to fight over!

Finally, I enjoy books that empower the reader. Here I am thinking of "Think and Grow Rich" by Napoleon Hill or "Good to Great" by James Collins. These are the kinds of books that make me feel invincible, both as a businesswoman and as an individual. When my son, Nathan, was driving back from college with his cousin Eliza, I gave them my audiobook library to help pass the time. Scrolling through the titles, Eliza noticed that it was pretty evenly split between literature, fluffy entertainment, and self-improvement books. She and Nathan agreed that if the fluffy entertainment was "mind candy," then the literature must be "mind meat-and-potatoes." They were stumped on what to call the last group, until Eliza declared that those were "mind salad." I loved hearing about those categories, because they show that the kids understood we need a wide variety of reading to have a healthy literary diet. I hope my kids will expand their appetites to try different genres as well.

This March, I hope you crack open a paperback or hit "play" on an audiobook and celebrate Read Across America Day with me. Let me know what some of your favorite books are. I am always looking for exciting new authors to try.

-Ruby Bolton

An Easy Way to Drink More Water AND AVOID DEHYDRATION

Dehydration is a big problem. Many people don't drink enough water each day — some reports show that 75% of adults in the United States don't drink enough water, and over a quarter are dehydrated. Though those statistics aren't widely agreed upon, it's obvious that most people need more fluids.

Even if it feels like you're drinking a lot of water, remember that water leaves your body every time you sweat, go to the bathroom, and even breathe. Not keeping up with proper water intake can lead to dehydration. Even mild dehydration can cause health problems and impact your brain, heart, skin, and other organs, which can lead to headaches, confusion, fatigue, and gastrointestinal distress.

We all know the solution to dehydration is to drink more water, but exactly how much water do we need each day? The amount will differ depending on the person, but one simple way to approximate your necessary daily intake is by dividing your body weight in half and drinking that much water (in fluid ounces) each day. For example, if you weigh 175 pounds, you'd need to drink 87.5 fluid ounces — over half a gallon — of water per day.

That might seem like a lot of liquid, but you can easily drink it without trying too hard. All you have to do is be proactive: Start keeping water any place you frequent during the day. Keep a bottle in your car, at your desk, by your favorite chair, near your workout equipment, etc. Having water easily available in the places you spend the most time each day helps increase your chances of actually drinking it.

An alternative approach is to purchase a giant jug that can hold all the water you need to drink in a day. Seeing it all in one place might be intimidating at first, but this method makes things very simple. Keep the jug close, and your water intake will likely increase without too much additional effort. And if you're just not motivated to drink plain water, you can always add sugar-free flavoring or lemon to make it more enticing.

TAKE A BREAK

A LITTLE DISTRACTION THIS ONE SMALL THING IS KILLING YOUR PRODUCTIVITY

Distractions in your workplace destroy your productivity, regardless of where you actually work. But here's the kicker: Some distractions don't always register as distractions because they're often minor, like a knock at the door or a conversation you can hear from two cubicles over. However, even when a distraction doesn't feel like a distraction, it still kills your productivity.

But one distraction in particular can absolutely ruin productivity. It isn't as obvious as an unexpected phone call or a meeting that could have been an email. It's a small, normal part of our everyday lives: the notification.

We get notifications on our phones, tablets, laptops, desktops, and even our smartwatches. Notifications are everywhere, and we're conditioned to accept them.

Take email, for example. You're likely in the habit of checking email periodically — or whenever you get a notification. It can feel natural to quickly check your email and then get back to what you were doing. Except that never happens.

When an email, text, or other random notification distracts you, it completely diverts attention away from what you were doing. If it's spam, you may delete the email. Or, if you need to respond, it might take a few minutes or more. You may spend anywhere between 20 seconds to 20 minutes on any given email.

However, this isn't where time is lost. If you're responding to a customer email, for instance, that is part of your productivity. The time is lost when you attempt to get back to what you were doing before checking your notifications.

A University of California, Irvine study found that it takes an average of 23 minutes to get back to your task after every distraction, not just email. Over the course of a day, that adds up to a significant amount of wasted time.

How do you overcome this? Your best bet is to turn off notifications. Most devices let you customize your notifications so you can turn them off during working hours. Here's another quick tip: Set aside time during the day to check emails, texts, and other messages. You will significantly reduce the amount of time spent trying to refocus on the important tasks at hand.

3 Ways to Help Your Legal Case Move Faster (And 3 Ways to Mess It Up)

Every legal case proceeds at its own pace. The Myra Clark Gaines litigation — a fight over an inheritance that began in 1834 — famously lasted 55 years. Even simple car accident cases often take more than a year to resolve. Frustration during the legal process is normal, but if you're feeling it, there are a few things you can do to help your lawyers move things along:

- Respond to communication quickly.
- Share all of the details about your case.
- Keep your emotions in check.

This might seem like common sense, but you'd be surprised by how quickly ignoring these three items can send your case off the rails.

Be Quick to Click

When your attorney emails or calls you, it's vital to answer as soon as you can. Some steps of the legal process are time-sensitive, and if you ignore your attorney or wait hours or days before responding to them, you could miss a crucial window. Your lawyer might even walk away from your case, like the attorney in the 2002 Garden v. Garden case who withdrew when his client stopped responding. That said, it's vital not to overcommunicate with your lawyer either. Always respond when they reach out, but don't flood their inbox with emails or load their voicemail with messages. Clogging their information channels will just slow down their work, and it might end up costing you. Your attorney's billable hours may include time taken to respond to emails.

Don't Hide the Details

Some facts of your case could be embarrassing or hard to talk about, but the best way to keep things moving is to share everything with your lawyer upfront. This will save time because your lawyer won't have to continue prodding you for information, and it could also save your case! Your lawyer won't be able to defend you well unless they have all of the relevant information. Plus, if opposing counsel discovers something you've been hiding, your case may fall apart.

Tamp Down Your Temper

Court cases can get emotional, especially if something like child custody is at stake. Even so, if you have to appear in court it's vital you keep your emotions in check and listen to your attorney's advice about what to say and do. If you lose your temper or disrupt the court process, the judge could hold you in contempt of court — potentially triggering a fine or even jail time. This will certainly derail your case's timeline. For proof, consider a defendant in a burglary case, Manson Bryant, who was sentenced to 22 years in prison. When he heard the verdict, Bryant started shouting at the judge — who added six more years to his sentence on the spot.

ASPARAGUS AND SMOKED MOZZARELLA PIZZETTES

Inspired by EatingWell.com

Ingredients

- 1 lb prepared whole-wheat pizza dough, divided into 6 equal portions
- 12 oz asparagus spears, trimmed and cut into 1-inch pieces
- 1 tbsp extra-virgin olive oil
- 1/4 tsp salt
- 1 cup shredded smoked mozzarella cheese
- 1/3 cup scallions, thinly sliced
- 2 tbsp walnuts, toasted and chopped
- 1 sprig of fresh mint leaves, torn
- Zest of 1 orange

Directions

1. Preheat oven to 500 F and ensure there are two racks in your oven.
2. Line a large baking sheet with parchment paper, stretch each piece of dough into a 7-by-3-inch oval and arrange evenly on the pan.
3. On a second baking sheet, toss asparagus with oil and 1/4 tsp salt.
4. Place dough on top rack and asparagus on bottom and bake for 3 minutes.
5. Remove both trays from the oven, sprinkle cheese over the dough, then top with asparagus and scallions.
6. Return pizzettes to oven and bake until the crusts' edges are golden, about 8–10 minutes.
7. Remove from the oven and sprinkle with walnuts, mint, and orange zest before serving.